The First Jewish-Roman War (66-73 AD) was a rebellion by Jewish groups against Roman rule in Judea.

Several biblical passages speak about God's future protection and victory for Israel, particularly in the context of the end times. These scriptures suggest that even though Israel may face future conflicts, God will ultimately ensure their safety and triumph over their enemies:

- God fighting for Israel: Exodus 14:14 says, "The Lord will fight for you, and you have only to be silent". Psalm 27:2 speaks of enemies stumbling and falling when advancing against Israel.
- Israel will not be destroyed: Jeremiah 31:35-36 contains a covenant from God stating that Israel will not cease to be a nation. This is reinforced by Isaiah 54:17, which declares that no weapon formed against Israel will prosper.
- Future peace: Psalm 122:6 encourages prayer for the peace of Jerusalem and the security of those who love it.

While these scriptures indicate a future of peace and security for Israel, it's important to remember that they are often interpreted within the context of end-times prophecy. These interpretations can vary among different theological perspectives.

Specifically concerning the re-establishment of Israel as a nation, Jeremiah 30:3 mentions God restoring the fortunes of Israel and Judah, bringing them back to their land. Ezekiel 37:21-22 also speaks of God gathering the people of Israel and making them one nation in their land. Some scholars believe the re-establishment of Israel in 1948 was a fulfillment of these prophecies, and further conflicts, such as the Six-Day War in 1967, are seen as part of a larger divine plan of protection.

The Bible foretells future conflicts that Israel will face, such as the war of Gog and Magog (Ezekiel 38-39). However, it also promises God's intervention and protection during these times, leading to Israel's ultimate victory and the establishment of lasting peace. These prophecies reinforce the belief that Israel's security is guaranteed by God's promise and covenant.
